Why a work brigade to Cuba?

- There is no better way to get to know the Cuban people than working alongside them, sharing meals and leisure time
- Every year thousands of people from all over the world leave the comfort of their homes to take part in this extraordinary experience
- Canadians have won a warm spot in the hearts of Cubans since the first brigade in 1992
- Hundreds of participants representing the majority of Canadian provinces have visited the beautiful island and its people.

We work in partnership with the Cuban Institute for Friendship with the Peoples, based in Havana

What is a Work Brigade?

A Work Brigade consists of a group of people (Brigadistas) travelling to Cuba to volunteer their work alongside Cubans. Initially inspired by Che Guevara, the Brigade is seen as one of the most inspiring gestures of international solidarity. Brigadistas will live in special camps or hotel carrying out agricultural or other productive work.

The Brigade provides a unique opportunity to experience the Cuban Revolution and its accomplishments. Brigadistas will take part in a full program of activities including visits to social, political and community organizations representing Cuban society. The Brigade program also provides leisure time and excursions to places of interest.

Where will we be in Cuba?

Every year we visit a different province. We have worked in many provinces including Granma, Havana and Santa Clara. Santa Clara is the city that Che liberated from the Batista forces. This was the event that consolidated the triumph of the Cuban Revolution. We fly from Toronto to Holguin where we are picked up by buses and taken to where we will be working.

What kind of work will we do?

It depends on the specific needs at the time, but it may involve agricultural or construction work. Everyone is encouraged to participate, but only up to the limit of our physical condition. Only approximately one third of our stay will be dedicated to work. The remaining time is spent experiencing Cuba. See the full program at

Other activities

In every brigade, one night will be a "Brigadistas night". That is when we hope to show our Cuban friends some aspects of Canadian culture - food, dance, songs, etc. We all contribute according to our skills.

It is a night to share.

A comment from a Brigadista:

"I have decided to bring Cuba to my daily life so every day I spend some time thinking about people who are living there (singing, dancing, smiling, struggling, surviving, resisting). The trip to Cuba was a wonderful experience for me because it helped me understand better the revolutionary process. My comprehension of the Cuban reality is much clearer now."
